

John Edelen III House
East side of Falls Road
Not accessible
Date: 1850-1880

The John Edelen III House is a two story frame house with a two story shed-roofed kitchen wing which was characteristic of so many kitchens during that time in the region. Originally a tenant house or tradesman's house, it stands on a piece of land that was once part of Nancy's Palace (patented in 1796) which was sold by Harvey Merryman to William C. Gent in 1859. The house appears in the 1877 Hopkins Atlas.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The John Edelen III House is a three-bay, two-storey frame house facing south with a two storey two-bay shed-roofed kitchen wing extending north behind its west end; the lower (west) eave of the wing is approximately at the same elevation as the principal eave. Brick chimneys rise internally at the east gable of the principal section of the house and in the northwest corner of the kitchen wing. The house dates from the mid-nineteenth century.

Recent additions have extended the kitchen wing to the east, somewhat masking the original shed form of the kitchen wing's roof; a one storey shed-roofed porch extends across the east front of this addition, its roof continuing across the east end of the main house to cover an added room there. An earlier shed-roofed porch extends across the south front of the main house; it has turned columns.

The south fascia is scalloped, a decoration which extends up the verge of the west gable; the east gable verge is plain. The west gable is covered with wood shingles, the butts of which are cut to half-octagonal shapes. Other walls are covered with plain weatherboarding.

First storey windows are 2/2 with narrow beaded frames. Second storey windows are modern replacements consisting of narrow "brick-mould" frames and 6/6 sash. The central bay of the south front's second storey is void of an opening; the principal entrance is there in the first storey. The partially glazed door dates from the early 20th century.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The John Edelen III House appears to have been a tenant house of a small farm, or a local rural artisan or tradesman's house.

This house stands on a piece of property which was known as Nancy's Palace originally patented in 1796. The land, which borders the Falls Road to the east, was sold by Harvey Merryman to William C. Gent in 1859 and is mentioned in Gent's will of 1871. The house appears in the 1877 Hopkins Atlas.

Internally the main house consists of one large room in the first storey, two with a small hall in the second; the kitchen wing is a single room in each storey. The enclosed winding stair rises to the second floor north of the chimney breast; the latter has a fireplace with a mantel consisting of plain pilasters supporting a plain frieze. A small cupboard is built into the south side of the chimney breast above the firebox. Window architraves are of two plains, doors of one, all with a largish ogee backband. A fireplace is in the northwest corner of the kitchen wing (now the dining room) and its mantel is a recent addition, removed from Pleasant Prospect (q.v.), consisting of an architrave, a paneled frieze, bed-mould and moulded shelf.

Circular-sawn ceiling joists are exposed in the kitchen wing.

Several original doors of vertical beaded boards remain in the second storey.

In the attic the straight-sawn rafters are half-lapped and pegged at the ridge. Some circular-sawn lathe with cut nails is exposed in the attic stairway.

The stone-walled cellar is somewhat smaller than the present house, possibly because it related to an earlier smaller house or possibly because it was dug after the present house was built. First floor joists are a random mixture of long and straight sawn dimensional lumber.
